

Are you looking at a cancer survivor or philanthropist? The answer is both.

At age 10, Gary Yost was diagnosed with a rare bone cancer. The advanced treatment he received at Seattle Children's saved his life, but mounting medical bills would likely exceed his family's insurance. Fortunately, Children's stepped in. The cost was paid by the hospital's uncompensated care program. Last year alone, Children's provided

Hope. nearly $100 million in uncompensated care to families in the region. Now in remission, Gary has turned his energy towards helping others. He organized a neighborhood lemonade stand to raise money for Seattle Children's, and his parents have become donors as well. To find out how you can help us help children like Gary, visit SeattleChildrens.org.

Seattle Children's HOSPITAL • RESEARCH • FOUNDATION

Hope. Care. Cure.™