

They had a good income. They had medical insurance. Then they had Noah.

At birth, Noah Johnson had large cysts growing inside his cheek and neck. Doctors feared he might never breathe or swallow on his own. The first ten days of his life, Noah received round-the-clock attention at Seattle Children's Hospital. His first year was plagued with infections and developmental difficulties, requiring frequent trips to Seattle from the family's home in Wenatchee.

Hope.

Noah will need specialized care for years to come. Despite a steady income and medical insurance, treatment costs overwhelmed the Johnsons. Desperate, they applied for uncompensated care at Seattle Children's. When accepted "we fell to our knees with gratitude," says Noah's Mom. Last year, Seattle Children's provided over $114 million in uncompensated care to our region's children. Generous donors like you are angels of mercy for families like Noah's. Learn more or give at seattlechildrens.org/ways-to-help.

Seattle Children's HOSPITAL • RESEARCH • FOUNDATION

Hope. Care. Cure.™