

Erin Johnson, MD

Dr. Erin Johnson is a New Jersey native who studied Art History as an undergraduate at Columbia University in New York before transitioning to medicine. Earning her medical degree at Case Western Reserve Medical School, Erin went on to complete her Pediatric Residency here at Seattle Children's Hospital, where she conducted a survey of Northwest providers to understand current opinion on the difficult ethical questions involved in allocating limited life-saving resources during pandemic and disaster situations. Currently, Erin is completing her Fellowship in Critical Care Medicine at the Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh of UPMC, where she also works as a clinical ethics consultant and is an active member of both the Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh Ethics committee and Disaster Preparation committee. When not on service in the ICU, she is studying Bioethics at the University of Pittsburgh where she is enrolled in the Masters of Bioethics program.
