

Melissa Weddle, MD, MPH

Dr. Weddle received her medical education at University of Virginia, completed her pediatric residency at Case Western Reserve, public health training at Johns Hopkins-Bloomberg School of Public Health, and ethics education at Loyola University-Chicago. She has lived in Portland, Oregon for the past 10 years, where she is general pediatrics faculty and associate program director of the pediatric residency at Oregon Health and Science University. She serves as Senior Scholar at the OHSU Center for Health Ethics. Her academic interests include adolescent medicine, medical education, compassionate communication, and clinical ethics.