Who We Serve
The Cancer Survivor Program is open to survivors of childhood cancer with no signs of cancer who have been out of treatment for one or more years. We also serve those who have received chemotherapy or radiation treatments for other reasons. Our program is open to children and adults, no matter where they received their treatment.

Helping Childhood Cancer Survivors Thrive

Surviving cancer is a great triumph. It is also the start of your journey as a cancer survivor - a journey that lasts the rest of your life. Our Cancer Survivor Program helps children and young adults stay healthy after cancer treatment.

Up to two-thirds of all childhood cancer survivors have adverse long-term effects. These risks for these effects vary for each survivor depending on many factors, including type of disease, treatment, and age during treatment. Our team includes an oncologist and a pediatric nurse practitioner who work with each survivor to monitor and discuss the risks associated with specific treatments including chemotherapy, radiation and surgery.

Our team meets weekly to review and manage each survivor’s care. We work with other providers in the Cancer and Blood Disorders Center, and in other Children’s specialty clinics, to provide integrated care across all disciplines.

An Integrated Network of Support Services

The Cancer Survivor Program provides clinical follow-up care, education, research and advocacy.

Clinical Care — We conduct a comprehensive review of each survivor’s cancer and health history, including an assessment of medical and psychosocial needs and follow-up care. The Cancer Survivor Program provides referrals to social, community, medical and psychiatric resources and specialists.

Education — In addition to a personalized survivor notebook, a treatment summary and a long-term care plan, we consult with primary care providers to ensure continuity of care. We help you transition into adult care and offer ongoing opportunities for networking with other survivors.

Research — Seattle Children’s, together with the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center, is recognized for groundbreaking treatments in childhood cancer. Survivors may participate in ongoing studies to help improve cancer outcomes for children.

Advocacy — Because childhood cancer is rare, community physicians may have limited knowledge of survivors’ needs. The Cancer Survivor Program works with each individual’s primary provider to share cancer information and make recommendations for follow-up care.

We also work with teachers and employers to educate them about the unique needs of childhood cancer survivors. We make it a priority to help survivors meet their educational and career goals without discrimination.

Cancer Survivor Program Partners
The Cancer Survivor Program is part of the Seattle Cancer Care Alliance. Together with the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center and the University of Washington, we work to ensure cancer survivors receive lifetime support for their healthcare needs.

“I’m so impressed with the level of patient care! The Cancer Survivor Program team manages all of my specialty and other service needs with no stress to me.”
